

CHAPTER 15: SECESSION AND THE CIVIL WAR, 1861-1865

- Lincoln was elected to the white house in 1860 but didn't really have that interesting of a life previously.
- He was born to poor parents in Kentucky in 1809 and jumped around before gaining success as a lawyer.
 - He was humorous and persuasive and rose to lead the Whig party.
- He served in congress in 1847 but took a stand against the Mexican-American war and didn't get reelected.
 - He was also denied a position in Zachary Taylor's administration after campaigning w/ him.
- The passing of the Kansas-Nebraska act was his call to return to politics and he went against Douglas.
 - He allied with the republicans and got nominated as their presidential candidate.
- When the south succeeded his qualifications were scrutinized as he had almost no war or governing experience.
 - He was however good at inspiring a passion for the union in others and inspiring soldiers.
 - He not only talked about slavery but rekindled the idea that this was a crucial survival of democracy.

THE STORM GATHERS

- The secession of 7 states did not lead to war, compromises had to fail and war had to be justified.

THE DEEP SOUTH SECEDES

- In 1860 South Carolina succeeded in a mock constitutional convention.
 - They claimed that a sectional party had elected a president hostile to slavery.
- The cooperationists believed that slave states should act as a unit but they were undermined by South Carolina.
- By February South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas had succeeded.
- However the middle states, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Arkansas were more hesitant to succeed.
 - They had a more diversified and free economy and were more willing to seek compromise.
- Without waiting for the moderate states the Free states had a convention to establish the confederate.
 - The convention was dominated by moderates who voted down reopening the Atlantic slave trade, abolishing the 3/5 clause, and prohibiting the admittance of Free states.
- Their constitution was similar to the US but denied more power to the nat gov and more explicit about slavery.
- Jefferson Davis was the president and he was actually a moderate, the radicals were denied positions in the gov.
- The moderate government was partly to win the middle states but also because the radicals weren't a majority.
- The confederate was really just the union before the republicans and they really just wanted to be friends.
- Thus the confederate was really a moderate revolution and the only true rallying point was slavery.

THE FAILURE OF COMPROMISE

- Senator Crittenden wanted to compromise by promising to protect slavery in the slave states.
- Many republicans supported the compromise partially but Lincoln said they should hold strong to their values.
- The republicans did end up supporting Crittenden's amendment to protect slavery from the government.
- Compromise seemed likely but the fact of the matter was the both sides were too entrenched in their values.
- Lincoln also stated that he was elected on an anti-slavery agenda and to compromise would kill democracy.

AND THE WAR CAME

- The southerners captured many of the forts in their states without firing a shot.
 - Northerners questioned if a union held together by force was good and if they even wanted the south.
- A major push towards war was the northern business fearing loosing the south forever.
- In his inaugural address Lincoln said he would defend the forts they had but let the south attack first.
- Of the 4 remaining forts in the confederate 3 were in Florida and the other was fort Sumter.
- Lincoln sent orders to reinforce fort Sumter and the south captured it, taking the first shot in the civil war.
- Lincoln called for militia troops and the remaining states (Arkansas, Tennessee, and North Carolina) succeeded.
- Ft. Sumter united the north and even Douglas rallied hard to fight succession.
