

The Age Of Exploration

The Age of Exploration or Age of Discovery was an important period in European history. This era lasted from the late 1400's to the 1700's. This era was important because this started overseas exploration popularity. Even though England started late in exploration, King Henry VII sent John Cabot to explore other countries in 1497. As a result, England gained profits from its wool trade which benefited England. England was one of the most influential countries during the Age of Exploration because they created new ways to spread their religion and new ways to make money through trading.

John Cabot was born in Genoa, Italy and died in 1499. He moved to England in 1495 and in 1496 he got a patent from King Henry VII to explore the world. As a result, John Cabot claimed to have found Canada and discovered what is now North America. This created an impact on his home country because he found a new trading route which helped England sell and trade for money. The impact on Canada was that this started a new colonization in the name of England.

Martin Frobisher was also an English explorer that was born in 1535 and died in 1594. He seized to discover a Northwest Passage (Africa's northwest coast) during the 1550's. After he failed to explore this, he discovered Labrador. Then, he became an Elizabethan privateer and was authorized to take enemy's goods on sea. Because of this, many countries lost major goods that they were going to bring into their own country which
