Agricultural Education, 1930 The Gavel Delta Sigma Rho, 1928 Farming the Cutover Robert J. Gough, 1997 Farming the Cutover describes the visions and accomplishments of these settlers from their perspective People of the cutover managed to forge lives relatively independent of market pressures and for this they were characterized as backward by outsiders and their part of the state was seen as a hideout for organized crime figures State and federal planners county agents and agriculture professors eventually determined that the cutover could be engineered by professional and academic expertise into a Progressive social model and the lives of its inhabitants improved By 1940 they had begun to implement public policies that discouraged farming and they eventually decided that the region should be depopulated and the forests replanted By exploring the history of an eighteen county region Robert Gough illustrates the travails of farming in marginal areas He juxtaposes the social history of the farmers with the opinions and programs of the experts who sought to improve the region Significantly what occurred in the Wisconsin cutover anticipated the sweeping changes that transformed American agriculture after World War II

Women and Economic Activities in Fourteenth-century Ghent Shennan Lee Hutton,2006 In late medieval Ghent the second largest city in northern Europe unwritten customary law and cultural practices allowed women a much wider scope of economic enterprise than in many other areas of medieval Europe Gender and work in medieval Flemish cities has been neglected despite the fact that practices in Ghent have implications for urban centers throughout the Low Countries France and Germany Sources of actual practice the contracts preserved in the annual registers of the aldermen who ruled the city show that women were principals in sales of property management of investments and moneylending without male representation in one quarter of the legal acts recorded from 1339 through 1361 These findings call into question received notions that the legal incapability of married women limited and interrupted their economic lives In Ghent marital status did not determine women s economic lives which were relatively continuous and shaped more by their own choices The unwritten body of oral custom administered by the aldermen allowed some married women as well as single women and widows legal capability because they owned immovable property in their own names Women claimed that right by publicly performing the management of their property before the aldermen Most men accepted women s economic activities as necessary and beneficial to the family and household and their support was crucial but not uncontested There was a competing patrimonial system originating in rural landholding practices and noble culture which aimed at reserving management of property for men and eventually undermined the customary access of women to the economy This dissertation analyzes the activities of women in the property markets moneylending and credit and craft production and distribution Women were often buyers and sellers in the urban property market and especially in the annuities markets but they almost never invested in rural land There were many women producers and marketsellers who owned and operated their own businesses Women were significant moneylenders for both small amounts and large loans which circulated their wealth through the commercial economy and made it available for capital formation
