

Chapter 29 – Animal Behavior

Lesson 29.1 Elements of Behavior

Structure and Function

- 1. Behavior: the observable performance resulting to an organism
 - Behavior encompasses actions or activities that are performed on a regular basis within an environment (thoughts, emotions, feelings)
 - Many behavioral components are performed unconsciously (e.g., breathing)
- 2. Instinctive: that is, inherited, genetically determined behaviors that behavior will tend to proceed through a predictable, stereotyped sequence, across both individuals and different age groups of members of a population

Animal Behavior

- 1. Learned: behaviors that are acquired through experience (e.g., a mouse that has learned to avoid a particular stimulus after experiencing a negative event associated with that stimulus)
 - Acquired: learned behavior resulting in part with the learning of new things
 - Experiences: that influence behavior, such as stimuli that elicit specific responses (interactions between genes and the environment)

Learned Behavior

- 1. Learning: acquiring knowledge or skills through experience
 - Classical conditioning: occurs when an individual learns to associate two stimuli
- 2. Operant conditioning: a behavior is strengthened or weakened by consequences (e.g., a rat learns to press a lever to receive a food pellet)
- 3. Behavioral imprinting: occurs in certain species in which the young are predisposed to follow a particular individual (e.g., a duckling follows its mother)
- 4. Classical conditioning: a neutral stimulus that has no effect when it is presented alone acquires the capacity to elicit a response through association (e.g., a dog salivates in response to a bell)
