Section 1: The Fish Body

KEY IDEAS

- What are the main characteristics of fishes?
- What structures do fish use to swim and sense their environment?
- How do fish obtain oxygen from the environment?
- How do fish maintain their salt and water balance?
- How do fish reproduce?

CHARACTERISTICS OF FISHES

- What are the main characteristics of fishes?
- Fishes have endoskeletons, gills, closed-loop circulation, and kidneys.
 - Fishes are the most ancient vertebrates.
 - The diversity of fishes found today reflects various adaptations that enable fishes to live in the oceans and freshwater habitats around the world.

MOVEMENT AND RESPONSE

- What structures do fish use to swim and sense their environment?
- Fishes have many important structures for swimming and sensing their underwater environment, including endoskeletons, fins, swim bladders, and lateral lines.
 - All fishes have an endoskeleton, or internal skeleton, made of either cartilage or bone.
 - The fins on the backs and bellies of fishes increase stability and help them turn, dive, or climb rapidly.
 - Many fishes have a swim bladder, a gas-filled sac that allows them to regulate their vertical position in the water.
 - Fishes have a variety of sensory organs that allow them to sense light, smells, tastes, sounds, and water vibrations.
 - Fishes have a unique sense organ called a lateral line.
 - The lateral line is a system of small canals in the skin that are lined with sensitive cells that detect vibrations in water.

Woods,Andrew S. Flies,2019-03-20 Go into partnership with nature she does more than half the work and asks none of the fee Martin H Fisher Nature has undertaken an immense amount of work throughout evolution The evolutionary process has provided a power of information that can address key questions such as Which immune molecules and pathways are conserved across species Which molecules and pathways are exploited by pathogens to cause disease What methods can be broadly used or readily adapted for wild immunology How does co infection and exposure to a dynamic environment affect immunity Section 1 addresses these questions through an evolutionary approach Laboratory mice have been instrumental in dissecting the nuances of the immune system The first paper investigates the immunology of wild mice and reviews how evolution and ecology sculpt differences in the immune responses of wild mice and laboratory mice A better understanding of wild immunology is required and sets the scene for the subsequent papers Although nature doesn't ask for a fee it is appropriate that nature is repaid in one form or another The translational theme of the second section incorporates papers that translate wild immunology back to nature But any non human non laboratory mouse research environment is hindered by a lack of research tools hence the underlying theme throughout the second section Physiological resource allocation is carefully balanced according to the most important needs of the body Tissue homeostasis can involve trade offs between energy requirements of the host and compensatory mechanisms to respond to infection The third section comprises a collection of papers that employ novel strategies to understand how the immune system is compensated under challenging physiological situations Technology has provided substantial advances in understanding the immune system at cellular and molecular levels The specificity of these tools e g monoclonal antibodies often limits the study to a specific species or strain A consequence of similar genetic sequences or cross reactivity is that the technology can be adapted to wild species Section 4 provides two examples of probing wild immunology by adapting technology developed for laboratory species
