Chapter 1: What is organizational behavior

The Importance of Interpersonal Skills

Understanding human behavior plays a role in determining a manager's effectiveness. Developing managers' interpersonal skills also helps organizations attract and keep high-performing employees. Positive social relationships are associated as well with less stress at work and less intentions to quit. So, having managers with good interpersonal skills is likely to make the workplace more pleasant, which in turn makes it easier to hire and keep qualified people. Companies with a good reputation have been found to generate superior financial performance.

Management and Organizational Behavior

Managers make decisions, allocate resources, and direct the activities of others to attain goals. They also oversee the activities of others and are responsible for reaching goals. Managers do their work in an organization, which is a consciously coordinated social unit, composed of two or more people that function on a relatively continuous basis to achieve a common goal or set of goals.

The management functions have been planning, organizing, commanding, coordinating, and controlling up until now, but are changed into planning, organizing, leading and controlling. The planning function entails defining an organization's goals, establishing an overall strategy for achieving those goals, and developing a comprehensive set of plans to integrate and coordinate activities. This function increases the most as managers move from lower-level to mid-level management.

Organizing is the responsibility for designing an organization's structure. It includes determining what tasks are to be done, who is to do them, how the tasks are to be grouped, who reports to whom, and where decision are to be made.

Leading includes motivating employees, directing their activities, selecting the most effective communication channels, and resolving disputes between employees.

The controlling function includes monitoring, comparing, and potential correcting.

Managers perform interrelated roles:

1. Interpersonal roles: duties that are ceremonial and symbolic in nature
