

Investigation 2: Patterns of Inheritance – Complete, Incomplete, and Codominance

Inheritance of traits can occur in multiple forms. So far you have considered complete dominance, where a homozygous dominant or a heterozygous individual expresses the dominant phenotype, while an individual that is homozygous recessive expresses the recessive phenotype.

However, in certain cases a cross between two different allele forms results in a phenotypic expression that combines the two allelic traits. This type of inheritance is known as incomplete dominance. For example, if an offspring resulting from a cross between a red (RR) and a white (rr) snapdragon plant receives the dominant allele for red flower color (R) from one parent and the allele for white flower color (r) from the other, the resulting genotype will be Rr. The heterozygous form (Rr) of the plant will bear pink flowers since neither allele is completely dominant over the other.

1. Determine the possible phenotypes of the F₁ offspring when two pink snapdragons are crossed. Show your work in the space provided below.

Parent 2

2. What would be the resulting genotypes of a cross between a pink and a white snapdragon? Show your work in the space provided below.

Parent 2

Expression of both alleles of a particular gene is known as codominance. When alleles are inherited codominantly, both phenotypes are expressed at the same time in the heterozygous condition in contrast to incomplete dominance where the heterozygote is an intermediate between the two homozygotes.
