

DENSITY AND BUOYANCY

Density and Buoyancy

Name: _____

Reading Passage

Read the passage carefully before answering the questions that follow.

Density is a measure of how much mass is contained in a given volume of a substance. It is calculated by dividing an object's mass by its volume and is expressed in units such as grams per cubic centimeter (g/cm³). Substances with higher density than water, such as metals, sink in water, while substances with lower density than water, such as oil, float. The density of a substance is a constant property that does not change with the amount of the substance.

The buoyant force experienced by an object submerged in a fluid depends on the fluid's density and the volume of fluid displaced by the object. This principle, known as Archimedes' principle, explains why ships made of steel can float, although steel is much denser than water. The shape of a ship's hull allows a large volume of water to be displaced, creating enough buoyant force to keep it afloat. Density, too, can influence whether an object will float or sink. For example, a wooden block will float in water because its density is lower than that of the water.

Differences in density are also responsible for many natural phenomena. For instance, ice floats on water because it has a lower density than liquid water. This allows aquatic life to survive beneath the frozen surface. In the ocean, differences in water density, caused by temperature and salinity variations, drive ocean currents that transport heat and nutrients. Understanding density and buoyancy helps explain many natural phenomena and has a wide range of practical applications, from engineering to environmental science.

True or False: Density and Buoyancy Concepts

Circle whether each statement is True or False.

- An object with a higher density than water will sink when placed in water.
- A ship floats because it displaces enough water to balance its weight.
- Ice will float on water because it is less dense than the water it displaces.
- Ice floats on water because it has a lower density than liquid water.
- Objects will float in water if their density is less than the density of the water.
