

Lab 6: Newton's Second

Objective: To study accelerated motion under an applied force to test Newton's Second Law of Motion.

Pre-lab Discussion

In this experiment we will measure the acceleration of a cart subject to an applied force and test the theoretical predictions of Newton's Second Law. A general diagram for this experiment is illustrated here:

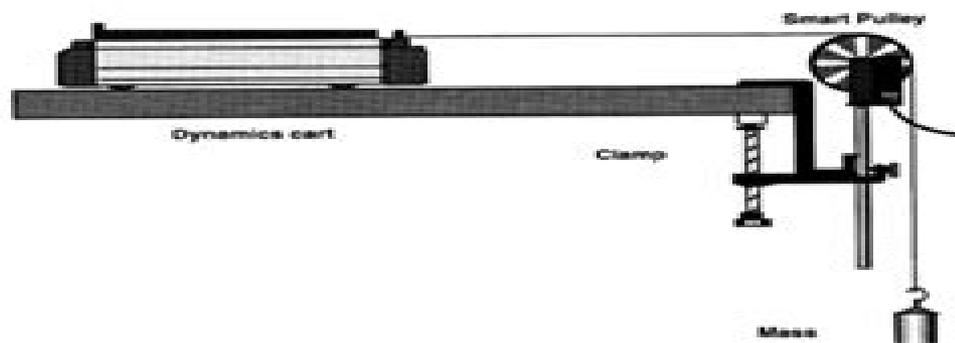

Treating the two masses as a single system with the pulley only serving to change the direction of the applied force, we see that the applied force is equal to m_2g . So $F = ma$ becomes $m_2g = (m_1 + m_2)a$. In this experiment we will first vary the applied force (while keeping the total mass constant) and then vary the total mass (while keeping the applied force constant). We will be measuring accelerations in each case.

Procedure

Part I: Acceleration With Fixed Total Mass

1. Obtain a dynamics cart, smart pulley, and mass set. Set up your kinematics track as shown below. Level the track as carefully as possible.

2. Configure Data Studio to use a smart pulley. Display a velocity graph so that you can measure accelerations by finding the slope of the graph.
3. Attach a string to the cart and a mass hanger (for m_2) to the string. Use a string that is long enough so that when the cart is next to the smart pulley and the string is over the pulley, the string touches the ground. Weigh your dynamics cart. Place an extra 20 g on the mass hanger (so that $m_2 = 25$ g), and 100 g of mass on the cart.
4. Pull the cart back so that mass m_2 is as high off the floor as possible. Release the cart from a stationary position and let it travel as far as it is able, while still accelerating. Do not let the cart hit the pulley! Don't let the mass hanger crash into the floor!
