Due Date: 2th May, 2016

Question 1 (20 points total)

Chapter 13, Question 7 – Suppose that the central bank observes a drop in real GDP, but does not know what caused this drop. Explain your answers with the aid of diagrams.

- a) (10 points) How would the central bank respond if it believed that GDP dropped because of a decline in total productivity, and that real business cycle theory is correct?
- b) (10 points) How would the central bank respond if it believed that GDP dropped because of a wave of pessimism, and that the Keynesian coordination failure model is correct?

Answer

- a) In the real business cycle model, what the central bank should do in response to a decline in TFP depends on the central bank's goals. If the central bank wishes to stabilize the price level, then it should reduce the money supply, but money is neutral in the real business cycle model, so there is no role for the central bank other than price level control.
- b) In the coordination failure model, money is neutral, just as in the real business cycle model,

Economics William A. McEachern, 2003 In Economics A Contemporary Introduction I draw upon more than a quarter century of teaching and research to convey the vitality timeliness and evolving nature of economics This book starts where the students are not where instructors would like them to be This edition is filled with down to earth examples that turn the abstract into the concrete to help students learn Topics common to both macro and microeconomics are covered in the first four chapters My approach to microeconomics underscores the role of time and information in production and consumption For macroeconomics I use the aggregate demand and aggregate supply model to underscore the fundamental distinction between the active approach and the passive approach International issues are introduced early and discussed often I use case studies as real world applications to reinforce ideas in the chapter and to demonstrate the relevance of economic theory
