Education Teacher Evaluation Report:

Teacher Evaluation Anthony J. Shinkfield, D.L. Stufflebeam, 1995-11-30 Teacher Evaluation Guide to Professional Practice is organized around four dominant interrelated core issues professional standards a guide to applying the Joint Committee's Standards ten alternative models for the evaluation of teacher performance and an analysis of these selected models The book draws heavily on research and development conducted by the Federally funded national Center for Research on Educational Accountability and Teacher Evaluation CREATE The reader will come to grasp the essence of sound teacher evaluation and will be able to apply its principles facts ideas processes and procedures Finally the book invites and assists school professionals and other readers to examine the latest developments in teacher evaluation

Teacher Evaluation in Tennessee Tennessee. Department of Education, 2012 In the summer of 2011 the Tennessee Department of Education contracted with the National Institute for Excellence in Teaching NIET to provide a four day training for all evaluators across the state NIET trained more than 5 000 evaluators intensively in the state model districts using alternative instruments delivered their own training Evaluators were required to pass an inter rater reliability exam in which they viewed video recordings of teachers delivering lessons and rated them to ensure they understood the distinction between differing levels of performance Implementation of the evaluation system began at the start of the 2011 12 school year The department made a concentrated effort to solicit and encourage feedback meeting with teachers and administrators across the state Educators voiced both strengths and concerns about various facets of the teacher evaluation process and implementation Legislators also received feedback from their constituents and shared information with department officials The department and others heard positive comments from administrators about improvements in the quality of instruction in classrooms and also heard concerns about particular facets of the system As implementation continued through the first semester of the school year it became clear that satisfaction with the evaluation system varied considerably from district to district driven largely by district and school level leadership While administrators continued to tout the system's impact on instruction the public discussion about teacher evaluation began to detract from the real purpose of the evaluation system improving student achievement In response Governor Haslam supported by legislative leadership tasked the State Collaborative on Reforming Education SCORE with conducting an independent review of the system through a statewide listening and feedback process and producing a report to the State Board of Education and department outlining a range of policy considerations In addition the Governor announced his support of House Joint Resolution HJR 520 which ultimately was adopted by the General Assembly This resolution directed the department to follow through on its commitment to seek feedback conduct an internal review of the evaluation system and provide a report with recommendations to the House and Senate Education Committees by July 15 2012 Through its feedback gathering process common themes have emerged 1 Administrators and teachers including both supporters and opponents of the evaluation model believe the TEAM rubric effectively represents high quality instruction and facilitates rich conversations about instruction 2 Administrators consistently noted that having school wide value added scores has led to increased collaboration among teachers and a higher emphasis on academic standards in all subjects 3 Administrators and teachers both feel too many teachers have treated the rubric like a checklist rather than viewing it as a holistic representation of an effective lesson and both groups feel additional training is needed on this point 4 Teachers in subjects and grades that do not yield an individual value added score do not believe it is fair to have 35 percent of their evaluation determined by school wide scores 5 Implementation of the 15 percent measure has not led to selection of appropriate measures with choices too often dictated by teacher and principal perceptions of which measure would generate the highest score rather than an accurate reflection of achievement 6 Administrators consistently noted the large amount of time needed to complete the evaluation process In particular administrators want to spend less time observing their highest performing teachers and more time observing lower performing teachers Additionally they feel the mechanics of the process e g data entry need to be more streamlined and efficient 7 Both administrators and teachers consistently felt better about the system as the year progressed in part due to familiarity with the expectations and because of changes that allowed for fewer classroom visits during the second semester and 8 Local capacity to offer high quality feedback and to facilitate targeted professional development based on evaluation results varies considerably across districts

Teacher Evaluation in Chicago Jennie Y. Jiang,Susan E. Spote,2015-12-14 This report finds teachers with the lowest scores on the REACH Students teacher evaluation system are overrepresented in schools serving the most disadvantaged students while teachers with the highest observation scores are underrepresented in these schools The study uses data from the 2013 14 school year which represents the first comprehensive snapshot of evaluation scores for Chicago Public School teachers under the new REACH Students teacher evaluation system This includes value added scores based on students gains on tests as well as scores from observations of teaching practices in classrooms It finds 26 percent of teachers with the lowest value added scores are in schools with the highest concentrations of poverty while 13 percent are in schools with the lowest concentrations of poverty The differences in observation scores are more pronounced 30 percent of the lowest scoring teachers are found in the highest poverty schools while only 9 percent are in schools with the lowest poverty In other words observation scores have a stronger relationship with school characteristics such as poverty than value added scores While more research needs to be done in Chicago to understand why these differences exist other research suggests these differences could arise because it is more difficult to recruit and retain high scoring teachers in high poverty schools or because it is more difficult to get a high observation score if teaching in a high poverty school The report also finds teachers in schools with better organizational and learning climates tend to have higher value added and observation scores and these differences remain significant when comparing schools with similar student characteristics including poverty level REACH and other teacher evaluation systems employ multiple measures to capture different aspects of teacher performance Value added scores are intended to capture student growth on test scores and explicitly control for measures of student disadvantage such as poverty and previous achievement Observation ratings are intended to capture a teacher's level of instructional practice and do not control for any student or school characteristics such as poverty The study also finds that on average African American Latino and other minority i e Asian Hawaiian Pacific Islander Native American and multi racial teachers observation scores are lower than white teachers observation scores However for African American teachers who are overrepresented in the highest poverty schools most of this difference seems to be due to the relationship between observation scores and school characteristics such as school level poverty There were no significant differences by teacher race ethnicity on either reading or math value added scores Teacher Evaluation Kenneth D. Peterson, 2000-05-19 The original edition published in August 1995 challenges current teacher evaluation and school practice The book discusses stages of teacher choice teacher responsibilities for evaluation and suggests ways for teachers to become more involved and in control of their own evaluation Combining information and techniques from his academic studies and evaluation experiences Peterson presents a coherent field tested set of new practices for teacher evaluation The revised edition adds new chapters on the role of the principal in changed teacher evaluation how districts can transition from current practice to improved practices the use of national standards developments in using pupil achievement data and puts a new emphasis on developing sociologically The Internet as a resource for local development is encouraged 67 web sites are recommended as starting points New resources for local development have been added from extensive field testing and analysis forms have been improved and district level principles have been assembled Substantial material has been added on the topic of responding to deficient teacher practice Finally the research literature has been augmented

Rethinking Teacher Evaluation in Chicago Lauren Sartain, Sara Ray Stoelinga, Eric R. Brown, Stuart Luppescu, 2011-11-18 Teacher evaluation is arguably the hottest issue in education right now Because of Race to the Top

many states and districts around the country are designing and implementing new teacher evaluation systems that for the first time ever evaluate teachers based on how much their students learn However there is limited research on how to build an evaluation system centered on classroom observations that can distinguish between effective and ineffective teaching This report from the University of Chicago Consortium on School Research focuses on Chicago but the lessons learned have significant applicability to districts across the country The report is one of the first to provide research based evidence showing that new teacher observation tools when accompanied by thoughtful evaluation systems and professional development can effectively measure teacher effectiveness and provide teachers with feedback on the factors that matter for improving student learning This is especially relevant for those districts that are implementing the Charlotte Danielson Framework for Teaching including Arkansas Delaware Florida Idaho Illinois New Jersey New York South Dakota Washington Los Angeles and Pittsburgh Catawba College, 1976, Self Study Report, Teacher Education Catawba College,1977
