

The Aztec Civilisation

The Aztecs were one of the ancient people of Central America. They were from Northern Mexico. Their homeland's name was Aztlan or "White Land" and Tenochtitlan was their capital city. The arrival in central Mexico in the 13th century was the start of a great era. Their empire was organised and strong. After some time, the whole valley of Mexico was under their control. They had a rich culture and their own language. They were very handworking people with a strong belief in family, art and education. They were very good at building, too. Their cities were crowded with people and they had lots of shops. Their markets were very popular with the public and were full of various goods. These markets were the reason for their strong economy.

The Aztecs also had their own vegetable gardens with vegetables such as corn, beans, potatoes, tomatoes and avocados. They were rulers for over 100 years. Sadly, in 1521 AD, the Aztec civilisation was ended with the arrival of the Spanish ruler Hernan Cortes. However, some people today in Central America still follow Aztec customs and their way of life.
