A History of Ellis Island

Before Ellis Island became an immigration station, immigrants used Garden, a landing dock off the coast of New York, when Captain Gardiner, the high demand for immigrants, government officials no longer used the high demand for immigrants, government officials build a station of Ellis Island, the station had two main buildings, the island was originally very small, measuring just 2.7 acres, however, the growing needs, ground, sand, and dirt were added. Today, the island has 27 acres and has several buildings.

The first immigration center on Ellis Island was finished in 1852 and was called the Old Castle. For the first five years of operation, the center was able to handle about 20,000 immigrants each year. In 1854, the new building on Ellis Island was built, which was called the Old Castle. In 1854, the new building on Ellis Island was built, which was called the Old Castle.

Following the fire, new buildings were constructed, to meet the growing needs of immigrants, which was growing several buildings were added, the main immigration building, was completed in 1900. Then, other buildings including a kitchen and hospital were built. These new buildings were built for the poor.
