BIOMOLECULES

Organic molecules are the molecules which exist in all living things. All living things are formed from these organic molecules. There are four categories of organic molecules: Carbohydrates, lipids, proteins and nucleic acids. Organic molecules have four common characteristics. First, they are all carbon based, meaning they all contain carbon. They are formed from just a few elements which join together to form small molecules which join together, or bond, to form large molecules. The third characteristic of all organic molecules is that each kind of organic molecule is built from a single type of building block known as a monomer. For example, the monomer of carbohydrates is the sugar glucose, the monomer of lipids is fatty acids and glycerol, the monomer of proteins is amino acids and the monomer of nucleic acids is the nucleotide. When these building blocks are joined together, they form a large molecule (polymer), just as bricks joined together form a wall. For example, sugars join together form a carbohydrate. The last common characteristic of all organic molecules is that their form determines their function. That means that their shape determines how they will behave and how they will react with other molecules.

Carbohydrates are the most abundant organic molecule because they make up most plant matter. They are made from carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. Their building block, a single sugar, is called a monosaccharide, glucose is an example. When more than two monosaccharides join together, a polysaccharide (poly = many) is formed. Carbs have the function of providing quick energy for the body.

Lipids are a class of organic molecules which includes fats and oils, and has the function of long term storage of energy in the body. The building block of lipids is the fatty acid and glycerol, which is a chain of carbons with hydrogen attached to each side.

Proteins are organic molecules that form muscles, transport O<sub>2</sub> (hemoglobin), and act as hormones and enzymes. Most importantly, proteins determine how our bodies look and function. Their building block is the amino acid. Proteins are made of amino acids linked by a peptide bond. When groups of amino acids are joined together, a protein is formed.

The fourth class of organic molecules is the nucleic acids. This class involves the genetic materials, DNA and RNA. DNA stands for deoxyribonucleic acid. It is the blueprint of life because it contains instructions on

Dissertation Abstracts International ,1977      Current Index to Journals in Education ,1979      An Introduction to Macromolecules L. Mandelkern,2012-12-06 The reception of the original volume by students pedagogues and reviewers has been most gratifying It appears to have both satisfied a need and served a useful educational purpose Hence some ten years later it has been deemed advisable to bring it up to date if only in a slightly expanded form The purpose for writing this book and its level remain the same Many new polymers have been synthesized in the last decade that have found meaningful and novel uses Examples of these applications are included in this new edition Major advances have also been made in biophysics and in molecular biology as well as in our understanding of natural processes on a molecular level Foremost among these has been the development of recombinant DNA technology With it has come the potential for large scale synthesis of hormones and proteins These new developments have also been incorporated into the present volume It is my hope that this new edition will still have a widespread appeal to students in all of the natural sciences whatever their major interest It should also be of use and inter est to those starting industrial or academic careers who have not had an extensive background in macromolecular science
