Studies and Reports ,1926 Mine-accident Statistics William Waugh Adams,1924 Coal-Mine Fatalities in the United States, 1870-1914 Albert H. Fay,2017-12-24 Excerpt from Coal Mine Fatalities in the United States 1870 1914 With Statistics of Coal Production Labor and Mining Methods by States and Calendar Years Classification and study of mine accidents on the basis of number of persons killed is common and very old but fails to throw enough light upon the problem involved Many serious accidents in mines have no fatal results hence in a tabulation of fatalities they are overlooked and the real hazard of the industry is not made clear An accident does not necessarily include an injury that may result therefrom Such accidents as the breaking of a hoisting cable an explosion of powder gas or dust a runaway car or motor are all serious Although no loss of life results they should be recorded investigated and studied to prevent their repetition NO accurate data for the United States are available showing how far the personal element as related to the miner and his co worker the mine foreman or to the superintendent and others in authority contributes to accidents Many accidents are due to inexperience on the part of the miner his failure to heed orders a misunderstanding of instructions and last but not least carelessness of himself or his fellow worker A foreman or superintendent may fail to give proper warning regarding the conditions of certain parts of the mine he may not have inspected certain rooms or entries on the day of a mine accident the mine may not be properly equipped or the operator may neglect to comply with the inspector s recommendations There is therefore a personal element on the part of both the operator and the miner that must be considered Legislation and the enactment of compensation laws will make the operator realize the seriousness of the mine accident situation when fatalities and injuries are to be paid for in legal tender of the realm The miner must be educated and made to realize the dangers he encounters he must learn that self preservation and the safety of his fellow workmen should receive his first attention he should cooperate with his employer his associates and the State mine inspector to the end that the mine hazard may be reduced to a minimum Cooperation for safety should be the watchwords of the operator miner State inspectors and all others in any way interested
