

Security architecture is a unified security design that addresses the necessities and potential risks involved in a certain scenario or environment. It also specifies when and where to apply security controls.

As described in the CISSP Study Guide, Security Architecture and Design describes fundamental logical hardware, operating system, and software security components, and how to use those components to design, architect, and evaluate secure computer systems.

It is further divided into 3 domains and each of them cover:

1. The hardware and software requirements to have a secure computer system.
2. The logical models required to keep the system secure
3. The evaluation models that quantify how secure the system really is.
