

AC 1.1 - Evaluate the effectiveness of the roles of personnel involved in criminal investigations.

Crime Scene Investigators (CSI) or Scene of Crime Officers (SOCO's)

One type of personnel involved in criminal investigations is crime scene investigators (CSI) or scene of crime officers (SOCO's). They are employed by police service to preserve and protect a crime scene while recovering evidence that is required to be kept uncontaminated to ensure it is reliable.

Becoming a SOCO often requires a degree in forensic science or in a specific scientific subject and it is also expected of them to have had experience in police work intelligence gathering and analysis. On average, they work around 42 hours per week with a salary of £16,000 to £35,000 per year.

One strength is that due to the high expertise and experience of crime officers, they can be trustworthy individuals and this also makes them effective because the risk of evidence contamination is low and their accuracy of evidence can secure a prosecution. Another strength is that there is very high availability due to how every police force in England and Wales employ them and they also work on an on-call system. This makes them effective as they are always available to assist in criminal investigations. One case example where SOCO's have shown effectiveness is the Sally Bowman case where Bowman was murdered and there were no suspects however SOCO's managed to collect DNA from the crime scene and then the offender was found. Also the cost of them makes them effective where they are only paid £16,000 to £35,000 which is affordable to police departments and the government more so than other personnel. This means we can employ more SOCO's which shows they are effective.

One weakness is that the job of a SOCO may not be socially desirable due to the hours and having to be on call all the time. So even though there is high availability of them, this may be reduced in the future where people could potentially stop applying for the job. Also SOCO's can be exposed to hazardous material and this could affect availability as people may not want to commit to a dangerous job. Another weakness is that there are many cases where protocols for collecting evidence have not been followed and therefore cases collapsed due to the lack of evidence. For example in the case of Amanda Knox they had failed to wear protective clothing and when wearing shoe coverings, they failed to take them out when they went outside and therefore evidence was unreliable. This shows how SOCO's can be ineffective.

SOCO's have high expertise and have the ability to collect forensic samples in the right manner and they are also educated as they will have degrees and which suggests they have the right knowledge which means they will be effective in their role.
