by regulating the pituitary gland's activity through hormone secretion and controlling various physiological processes such as body temperature, thirst, hunger, and circadian rhythms.
3. Identify the location and function of the following parts of the pituitary gland (hypophysis): adenohypophysis, neurohypophysis, infundibulum
  - Adenohypophysis: Located in the anterior pituitary gland, it secretes several hormones including growth hormone, prolactin, thyroid-stimulating hormone, adrenocorticotropic hormone, follicle-stimulating hormone, and luteinizing hormone.
  - Neurohypophysis: The posterior pituitary gland, which stores and releases hormones produced by the hypothalamus, such as oxytocin and antidiuretic hormone.
  - Infundibulum: Also known as the pituitary stalk, it connects the hypothalamus to the pituitary gland and serves as a conduit for hormone transport.
4. What are the two categories of hormones that the hypothalamus secretes to control the pituitary gland?

Follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH) stimulates spermatogenesis in males and promotes follicle development in females.
