CREDIT POLICY A LOGICAL APPROACH IS KEY

Candidates seem to struggle with calculations that involve a change in receivables collection policy or payables payment policy. Study session 26 (f) requires candidates to 'evaluate and demonstrate the issues involved with early payment and settlement discounts' while study session 30 (e) requires candidates to 'calculate the cost of factoring arrangements, invoice discounting and changes in credit policy'.

When these areas have been examined in the past, the standard of answers has been low. I commented in my examiner's report for the December 2009 paper that a substantial minority of candidates scored zero or did not attempt the question. The previous examiner also commented in her report for the December 2007 exam, that there were 'few correct answers' and few candidates adopted 'any kind of logical approach at all'.

Many candidates seem to completely ignore questions of this type, leaving their answer script blank, and so do not put themselves in the best position to pass the paper overall.

There is not a proforma that can be learnt for this type of question. Scenarios can have different costs, eg there may or may not be credit insurance within a factoring question. In addition, there can be some trickier elements to these questions, as with any calculation question, but if candidates take a logical approach and attempt the question, marks can be gained.

This article aims to demonstrate to candidates how with a logical approach, they can answer these questions well.

Invoice factoring

Let us look at an example and see the benefits of a logical approach: C Co's receivables currently take 80 days to collect, and the receivables ledger stands at $20,000. Irrecoverable debts are 2% of sales, and working capital is financed by an overdraft on which interest of 8% is paid. A credit controller is employed, the cost of whom is $10,000 per year.

C Co has approached a factoring company, whose terms are:

- 75% of amounts receivable will be advanced for a fee of 7%
- Credit insurance of 1.5% of sales will be charged

The receivable days are expected to reduce to 60 days if the factoring company is used.

Assume 365 days in a year.
