Codex Project

An Aztec codex was like an ancient picture book that told stories about the Aztecs' history, religion, and daily life. Instead of using words like we do, they used detailed drawings, symbols, and bright colors to communicate important information. These codices were made on materials like bark paper or animal skin, and were folded like an accordion. They were created by trained scribes and artists, called tlacuilas, who used them to record everything from rituals and myths to tax records and trade details.

Codices were super important because they helped preserve the Aztecs' knowledge and traditions, especially since their language wasn't fully written out like ours is today. After the Spanish arrived, many codices were destroyed, but a few survived and give us a fascinating glimpse into Aztec life.

In this project, you will be creating your own codex. It will include vocabulary, people, places, events, and other important information you have learned about the Aztecs. You will create images and explanations for a collection of them in order to build your own codex.

This project is not an art project, but rather your ability to understand different aspects of Aztec life, so don't let you worried your drawing skills.

Codex Project

You will need to create a codex with a collection of people, places, and events. These should include an image and the description of the image.

You will need to include:

- 10 - Vocabulary Terms
- 5 - People
- 5 - Places
- 3 - Events

While the vocabulary terms come directly from the textbook, you may have to do some additional research when it comes to the people, places, and events.

	Aqueducts were used to transport fresh water from the Chapultepec springs to Tenochtitlan for drinking, washing, irrigating their crops, and more. These aqueducts ensured a clean water supply for the city and were an advanced engineering feat of their time.
	Spanish Conquistador was a Spanish conquistador who led the expedition that resulted in the fall of the Aztec Empire and the colonization of Mexico (using soldiers, horses, strategic alliances, and diseases). He overthrew Tenochtitlan and claimed the land for Spain, becoming the first governor of New Spain.

He overthrew Tenochtitlan and claimed the land for Spain, becoming the first governor of New Spain. The Destruction of Tenochtitlan was the final and most important battle of the Spanish conquest of Mexico. It was the last major battle of the Spanish conquest of Mexico. The Spanish conquistador Hernán Cortés led the Spanish forces to the city of Tenochtitlan, which was a major Aztec city. The Spanish destroyed the city and its infrastructure, marking the end of the Aztec civilization.
