

How to Make a Data Table

Name _____

Date _____

Data tables show your experiment results organized into a grid that shows the steps in making a data table.

1. On a plain sheet of paper, use a ruler to draw a data table like the one shown below.
2. Give your table a title that describes your variables ("The Effect of Different Types of Movies on Heart Rate").
3. Label the columns on the left as the independent variable (Type of Movie). Underneath, list each type of movie you used for the independent variable (Drama, Comedy, Horror).
4. Label the columns to the right as the dependent variable (Heart Rate Beats per Minute). Draw boxes under these columns in which you can record the result of each test for each independent variable.
5. Usually 3 columns to record the average result for each independent variable. To calculate the average result for each independent variable, add the results of all tests for a particular independent variable, then divide the total by the number of tests. Repeat this for the remaining independent variables.

The Effect of Different Types of Movies on Heart Rate

Type of Movie	Heart Rate (beats per minute)
	Test 1	Test 2	Test 3	Average
Drama	80	90	85	85
Comedy	90	95	90	92
Horror	100	98	105	101
