

Declaration of Independence

IN CONGRESS JULY 4, 1776

The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America

When in the course of these events a certain number of persons joined together to promote the united and co-ordinated efforts of the people, in order to separate themselves from the British Empire, and to assume among the people of these colonies a separate and equal station, that they should be recognized as free, sovereign and independent States, that they should be respected as such by all mankind, that their political connection with Great Britain should be totally dissolved, and that they should, as free, sovereign and independent States, have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, to do all other acts and things which independent States may lawfully do.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.

That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, in such a case, dictates that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all reform should be attempted by a Amendment of the existing Government; and when it is found that a Amendment is impracticable, and that a serious and dangerous situation has arisen, requiring the People to alter their former Government, a new Government should be instituted, and the People should be united in a Declaration of their Independence, and of their Rights and Obligations, in order to effect their Safety and Happiness.
