

Dreams Aspirations and Goals

4 pages | 757 words

I just want to start off by saying that I am truly blessed to be able to have the opportunity that so many don't have: getting an education. I dreamed I would always be able to learn to be able to do a little of everything no matter what it was: either it was learning culinary, mechanics, science, mathematics, history, etc. I've just wanted to be that one person who knows a little of everything; no matter what the skill was I could do it. It may sound impossible but "nothings impossible." As I enter the college life, this is where I will be determining my dream and where I truly will belong for the rest of my life it may take a while but that's what college is for to really test the waters and become comfortable with the one that occupation that really fits me well. I think what I really want to achieve in college is to be a role model; to be the role model that I want to be responsible by being able to balance my school, work, and social life, but most importantly I want to be able to make my family proud and support them like they did for me. I think my biggest dream was to become someone who can aspire and motivate people with their creativity or to just be a role model - hopefully that this experience in college will truly help me accomplish that.

I know that knowledge is key to pretty much everything we have to know - practically every and anything about whatever occupation we want to have. But what's wrong with using our creative side - Isn't it fun too just maybe once show up to class and have to draw for an assignment but no one says it has to be perfect no one expects you to be Picasso. We are being required to draw and use our creative side express our artistic side whether it be through words, drawing just to be able to just your true potential with creativity. In my experience of high school I had an amazing literature teacher who would sometimes just be fun and creative and just have us draw for one of our journals but it wasn't stupid it was creative. Being creative is one of my biggest passions in life. I hope that I can truly show people there is nothing wrong with being creative. Responsible the one thing some people are afraid to be. When you hear the words independent it describes everything about being responsible. It's when you start to do things on your own - a simple definition. In depth you have your own apartment maybe, pay your own car, bills, and you have a stable good paying job.

It shows true responsibility when you can balance your school, work, and social life because you've shown how mature and independent you can be - there is nothing more accomplishing to prove that you pushed yourself through all those nights of tears and sweat to finish that assignment.
